For a more in-depth rendering of some of the terms below, please refer to the Student Handbook of the Aikido Schools of Ueshiba In general, each syllable in a Japanese word is pronounced with equal emphasis. Some syllables, though, are hardly pronounced at all (eg. Tsuki is pronounced as "tski")

Techniques

The name of each technique is made up of- (1) the attack, (2) the defense, and, if applicable, (3) the direction.

There are four sets of directional references used in Aikido techniques (Some techniques do not have a specific "direction"):

1. Irimi (ee-ree-mee) refers to Yo (Chinese: Yang) movement which enters through or behind the attacker and

Tenkan (tehn-kahn) refers to In (Chinese: Yin) movement which turns with the attacker's energy.

- 2. Omote (oh-moe-teh) refer to movements in which nage's action is mostly in front of the attacker (also "above"), while Ura (oo-rah) movements take place mostly behind the attacker (also "below"). Omote and Ura also have the meanings of "exoteric" and "esoteric" (secret), respectively.
- 3. Uchi Mawari (oo-chee-mah-wah-ree) is a turn "inside" the attacker, i.e., within the compass of his arms, while

Soto Mawari (soh-toe--mah-wah-ree) is a turn "outside" the attacker, i.e., beyond the compass of his arms.

Hence also Uchi Deshi: inside student, living in the dojo; and Soto Deshi: outside student.

4. Zenshin (zen-shin), towards the front; Kotai (koh-tie), towards the rear.
